Celebrity of the Day

Baritone THOMAS HAMPSON joins Carnegie Hall's remarkable series of concerts featuring Gustav Mahler's orchestral works on Wednesday, May 13, performing the early song cycle, Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen ("Songs of a Wayfarer") under DANIEL BARENBOIM. Also on the program is Mahler's Symphony No. 7, played by the Berlin State Orchestra.

HAMPSON is particularly renowned in the art of the recital and as a specialist in American Song. His expertise as an interpreter of Mahler is well known all over the world – he has performed the composer's songs with such conductors as Leonard Bernstein, JAMES LEVINE, MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS, BERNARD HAITINK, CHRISTOPH ESCHENBACH, and many others.

Two seasons ago, after he sang the "Songs of a Wayfarer" in a series of concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under LEVINE, the Boston Globe's JEREMY EICHLER described his performance as a highlight of the concert: "HAMPSON sang beautifully, with a resonant, burnished baritone, and a striking suppleness of expression that reflected his many years of immersion in this repertoire."

That same season, the Chicago Tribune's JOHN VON RHEIN wrote of a Chicago Symphony Orchestra concert that the program's high point was:

"THOMAS HAMPSON's deeply felt performance of Mahler's 'Songs of a Wayfarer'. HAMPSON is singing at the very peak of his vocal form and artistry, and I can't remember when I've heard anything finer from him. His exceptional range of color and dynamics, his vocal ease and evenness over a wide range, his flexibility of phrasing, his acute sense of detail – all bespoke a singing actor of the utmost expressive intensity and musical understanding."

HAMPSON enjoys the intimacy of the recital and concert hall more than many stars of the opera stage do, but has been especially busy singing opera this season. At the Metropolitan Opera alone he participated in the opening night gala and portrayed Athanaël in Massenet's "Thaïs" opposite RENEE FLEMING; returned to the title role in Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Onegin" in highly praised performances opposite KARITA MATTILA; and sang an excerpt from Wagner's "Parsifal" with PLACIDO DOMINGO during the Met's 125th Anniversary Gala honoring DOMINGO's 40th anniversary at the Met. In March, HAMPSON also made his debut as Scarpia in Puccini's "Tosca" at the Zurich Opera.
